Dealing In Delaware

Bessie Gruwell earns the respect of horsemen nationwide

BY LINDA DOUGHERTY

A lifetime of hard work, dedication, and sacrifice has all come together to make Bessie Gruwell one of the most respected women in racing, not only at her home base of Delaware Park but in the Mid-Atlantic region and beyond. Gruwell, the executive director of the Delaware Thoroughbred Horsemen's Association, has earned her stripes. The daughter of a Maryland trainer, she grew up following reluctantly in her father's footsteps, filling his shoes upon his early death. An inner strength and iron constitution helped her survive many lean years once she secured her own trainer's license, years that saw her juggle a barn full of horses at the Stanton oval when purses were barely $35,000 per day and a full-time job with a local company in order to make ends meet.

Gruwell's spirit and resolve were also tested with the untimely death of her husband, Richard, a partner in life and an integral part of her racing stable, but she was able to pull through.

Today Gruwell is a strong advocate for Delaware Park's horsemen and for horsemen nationwide. Her advice is sought and valued by many of Thoroughbred racing's leaders on a wide variety of issues including medication, health and welfare, and the impact of expanded gaming. She was among a core group of horsemen who created the successful and expanding Delaware Certified Thoroughbred Program, which functions as a breed program in a state where no stallions stand. Her ability to communicate and negotiate effectively has earned the respect of Delaware Park management.

Gruwell was born and raised in Port Deposit, Md. Her father, Tom Lovelace, was an owner and trainer based at the now-defunct Sun View Training Center in Glasgow, Del., a short distance from Delaware Park. By her own admission she had no interest in Thoroughbred racing—although she helped her dad walk hots and do barn chores. Gruwell instead wanted to pursue a career either in the Air Force or in business administration.

But racing soon got in her blood. After spending one year at college, she took a job as a groom and in 1983 found herself at Churchill Downs grooming horses for trainer Jimmy Kirk, a job that she anticipated would take her to racetracks across the country. The day before the first Kentucky Derby (gr. I) she would see in person, her mother called to inform her that her father had suffered a heart attack, but he did not want her to know as he wanted her to enjoy the Derby.

"After the race," she said, "I came home, and two weeks later he passed away."

Her father's death thrust 20-year-old Gruwell into a role she could not afford and did not want to accept.

"I was taking care of his whole operation," she said. "I just figured I'd get rid of all his horses—he had about a dozen at the time. In the process one of his owners told me, 'We want you to continue training.' I didn't have the money to train horses, and I didn't want to. I wanted to go back to work in Kentucky, as Kirk's outfit was about to leave for California. It was like a free trip to see the world for me, with these really nice horses. My dad's horses were more from the claiming ranks. But his owners worked with me and said they would pay me."

With a small string of horses, Gruwell began working out of the Sun View Training Center. In 1988 Sun View closed, and she moved to the Delaware Park backstretch, where she worked hand in hand with her late husband who was her exercise rider and assistant. But purses were low, and it was hard to make ends meet, so in 1987 she took on a second full-time job at the DuPont Aerospace Division, located near the racetrack. The division made solar and heat panels for satellites and shuttles for re-entry into the earth's atmosphere, as well as heat shields for the military, and Gruwell's job was on the manufacturing floor.

For the next 12 years Gruwell kept a grueling schedule that saw her working from before sunrise to long after dark.

"Richard and I would get here as soon as the track opened and start training," she recalled. "Most of the time we were done by the break, and I could leave and go to work. So I already had done a full day's work by the time I left for DuPont. My day started at 3:30 a.m., and I was usually home by 7 p.m. because after I got done at DuPont, I would come back to the track and run feed."

In the early 1990s Gruwell's stable grew to nearly 40 horses, and she was the second-leading trainer for three consecutive years.

But in 1995 Gruwell's world was turned upside down, not only by the news that DuPont had sold its aerospace division to Swales Aerospace, which announced it would be moving to a new location in Beltsville, Md., but by her husband's death.

"I was only 33 years old," said Gruwell. "To wake up and be a 33-year-old widow and not know where you're going to go, what you're going to do...it was hard. He died in August, and the meet had only a couple of months to go, and I said, 'I'll get through this.' I was working like a crazy person, and at some point in those last few months Swales Aerospace decided all employees had to work a mandatory 60-hour week. So not only was I doing all this stuff with my own horses, I had a 60-hour work week on top of that. And I did it all; I managed everything, with the help of friends and loyal employees at the barn."

When the 1995 Delaware Park meet ended, Gruwell wanted to quit training, but she had a young homebred named Mattie's Memories that was close to making her career debut. Named after Gruwell's mother, Mattie's Memories was out of the mare C.I.S. Express, whom Gruwell had trained and won 20 races with, despite the mare's having bowed tendons in both front legs.

"I didn't want to walk away knowing here she is, about to go to the races next year," said Gruwell of Mattie's Memories. "And a lot of times, that's what keeps you in this business, knowing you've got this young horse."

Gruwell returned for the 1996 meet, but it was "the absolutely worst meet I'd ever had in my life," she said. Mattie's Memories broke her maiden in her first start by nearly eight lengths in early November, but it was Gruwell's first win of the season. Buoyed by the 2-year-old filly's smashing debut, she made the decision to return again in 1997, and not only did her racing fortunes improve—she scored her first stakes win at Laurel Park with Absolutely Queenie—but her new career as an advocate for Delaware Park's horsemen was launched.

At first, Gruwell became a meet director, which gave her voting rights on the Delaware Thoroughbred Horsemen's Association board, but only for the duration of the meet. When the meet was drawing to a close she was encouraged to run for president, and she won, serving in that capacity until 2005, when she was hired for the paid position of executive director. Upon taking the job, Gruwell—who by then was the mother of a young daughter, KaylaBelle, from a previous relationship—decided to simplify her life and devote more time to her daughter and to the DTHA, giving up both training and the job at Swales Aerospace, which required her to commute more than 90 miles each way from Delaware Park. Along with breeder/owner Barbara Brown, Gruwell created and implemented the Delaware Certified Thoroughbred Program, which by all accounts has been a rousing success since it debuted in 2003.

Brown and Gruwell put their heads together and crafted a plan whereby weanlings and yearlings, regardless of the state in which they were foaled, would become eligible for additional money if they spent 90 consecutive days at a registered Delaware farm prior to March 31 of their 2-year-old year. Upon the owner's paying a nominal fee, they would become "certified" for added bonuses at Delaware Park if they finished first, second, or third. The DCTP program was designed not only to boost future Delaware Park entries but to give farm owners extra income and, in the process, preserve jobs and open space.

"When slots were legalized in Delaware (in 1994), the Standardbred industry put together a good breeding program," said Brown. "I'd always say to Bessie how it wasn't fair for Thoroughbreds. I was aware the Standardbred program had legislative support. We needed the DTHA, the racing commission, and politicians to get on board with the idea, and she was invaluable in helping to do that."

In the beginning the DCTP offered a 10% bonus for owner and certifier (a synonym for breeder), with $500,000 coming from the DTHA's purse account. The first 64 DCTP Thoroughbreds hit the track in 2003, and the program has expanded this year to include more than 2,100 Thoroughbreds, 74 participating farms, and bonuses of more than $1 million.

Gruwell serves as an advocate for Delaware horsemen

In 2007 the DTHA was able to establish an innovative workmen's compensation captive insurance program, the first of its kind on the East Coast, for trainers stabled at Delaware Park. Five years ago the DTHA spearheaded an effort to allow Delaware Park horsemen to stable there during the winter rather than having to ship their horses out. Gruwell worked with management to create a plan whereby horsemen would pay stall rent from December through April, when the track was closed, with the DTHA paying a portion of that rent. When the track opened for live racing, management would rebate the stall rent if a horse made three or more starts.

Gruwell also found she needed to become more visible to state legislators by becoming involved in the legislative process on issues affecting Thoroughbred racing in order to represent Delaware's horsemen more effectively. That became especially clear when sports betting and table games legislation came up for consideration in the state capital of Dover in the last year. Horsemen initially were not going to receive a percentage of that additional play, as they did from slots. However, through a dedicated effort, the DTHA was able to get horsemen 9.6% of sports betting revenue and 4.5% from table games.

Gruwell has earned the respect of the Thoroughbred industry's horsemen and leaders beyond the Delaware Park stable gate.

"Bessie is a credit to our industry," said Alan Foreman, the chairman and chief executive officer of Thoroughbred Horsemen's Associations, based in Columbia, Md., a group that represents more than 20,000 owners and trainers throughout the United States, and of which Gruwell is secretary. "Her opinion is sought after on many different issues, everything from workmen's compensation to medication issues. She is a tremendous advocate for the Delaware Park horsemen, and she single-handedly, in my opinion, built that organization to where it is today."

"Bessie is great to work with," said Alex Waldrop, chief executive officer of the National Thoroughbred Racing Association. "She is passionate, knowledgeable, and always looking out for Delaware horsemen. I would have to say that she is one of the most effective executive directors in the country."

True to her nature, Gruwell is not content to rest on her laurels and already has her sights on tackling the next big issue that could potentially affect Delaware horse racing.

"Our main interest right now is to oppose the expansion of gaming in the state," she said. "There is talk about opening free-standing casinos, not racinos, which could put our industry back on life support. We don't want to go there."

In reflecting upon her years of service to Delaware's horsemen, Gruwell added: "I couldn't have done any of this without a strong board of directors and their support. I have been very fortunate that our association's board members have been so active, engaged, and committed to our mission...it's been a real team effort. I was fortunate to have been given the opportunity to be elected to the board at the beginning of the Thoroughbred development period in Delaware." □
