Tom Ludt does not consider himself a visionary, but he does understand the horse racing industry very well, and that is why in late 2010—just a few months after the drawn out process to build a casino at Aqueduct Racetrack finally came to a happy conclusion when it was green-lighted by lawmakers—Ludt made a major decision to expand Vinery operations to New York.

Along with Adena Springs, which had moved stallions to New York a year earlier, Vinery became one of the first major Kentucky-based farms to make a major commitment in New York (Spendthrift Farm has followed). As president of Vinery, Ludt thought bringing stallions to New York was the right move at the right time. His thinking was simple: With 5,000 slot machines projected to generate $44.8 million per year in additional purse monies for the New York Racing Association, and another $6.9 million per year slotted for the New York State Thoroughbred Breeding and Development Fund, racing was about to get a big boost in the Empire State.

At the time Ludt and Vinery owner Dr. Tom Simon made the decision to expand to New York, the move was still a bit of a gamble. The Aqueduct casino project had been dragging on for more than nine years, with legislation first introduced in 2001 but stalling along the way countless times for various reasons that included scandals, legal problems, and ugly politics. And though Malaysian-owned Genting was finally awarded operating rights to the casino in August 2010, nothing was imminent. Even when the Aqueduct casino officially opened on Oct. 28, 2011, nobody really was sure of the impact the additional slots revenue would have on the New York breeding industry.

Vinery, which stands its top stallions at its Kentucky farm near Lexington, had already made a major commitment in Florida in 2004 when Simon built a 220-acre farm near Ocala. Vinery purchased additional stallions and sent them to the new Vinery Florida operation with the thinking slots revenue from the casino that had opened at Gulfstream Park in 2006 would boost racing in the Sunshine State. In 2008 and 2009 Vinery also plunged into the breeding market in Louisiana, sending stallions Brahms and Yonaguska to Elite Thoroughbreds.

Overall, those decisions have proved successful, but in recent times, especially in Florida, breeding has taken a significant downturn. Currently, Vinery's top Florida stallion, Pomeroy, is standing for $10,000, which is the high end for the stallion market in the state. Given that, and the resources it had committed in Florida over the last six years, New York was a risky venture for Vinery.

"As time has evolved, our base, our big revenue source, became our stallions. That's our business," said Ludt, who began working full-time for Vinery in 2004 and was named president in 2008. "We decided to invest heavily in Florida and build a stallion complex down there. It has gone very well. The philosophy was to get bigger and become a rather large player, and that's what we did. We also sent Yonaguska and Brahms down to Louisiana. We felt that was the right marketplace for them.

"But we kept exploring our options," he said. "If you read projections, the purse structure in New York versus what is going on in Florida...the (New York) breeder has such tremendous opportunity. Louisiana has a good program and is stable because it's been there a long time. But it's never really dramatically grown. Racing is good, but (Dec. 10) was Champions Day (at Fair Grounds Race Course & Slots) and the feature was run for $150,000. You look at what New York is running for already; $60,000 for state-breds. It's incredible.

"New York is just getting bigger, and bigger, and bigger. If you and I buy a mare and put her in Louisiana, the upside is X; we buy that same mare and put her in Florida the upside is Y; we buy the same mare and put her in New York, it's X times Y. So that's the reason we made the move up there. We hedged that the timing was right for us to get in on a farm; slots were coming. That was the logic. This was the right time to expand in New York.”

Vinery's first move came in November 2010 when it took over operations of 160-acre Empire Stud near Hudson, N.Y. Vinery struck a deal with Empire Stud president Jamie LaMonica to operate the farm, then sent several of its Kentucky mares there, as well as stallions Posse and Repent. Vinery also added Darley's dual grade II winner Justenuffhumor to the initial roster.

Sending an accomplished, popular Kentucky stallion such as Posse to New York was another gamble for Vinery.

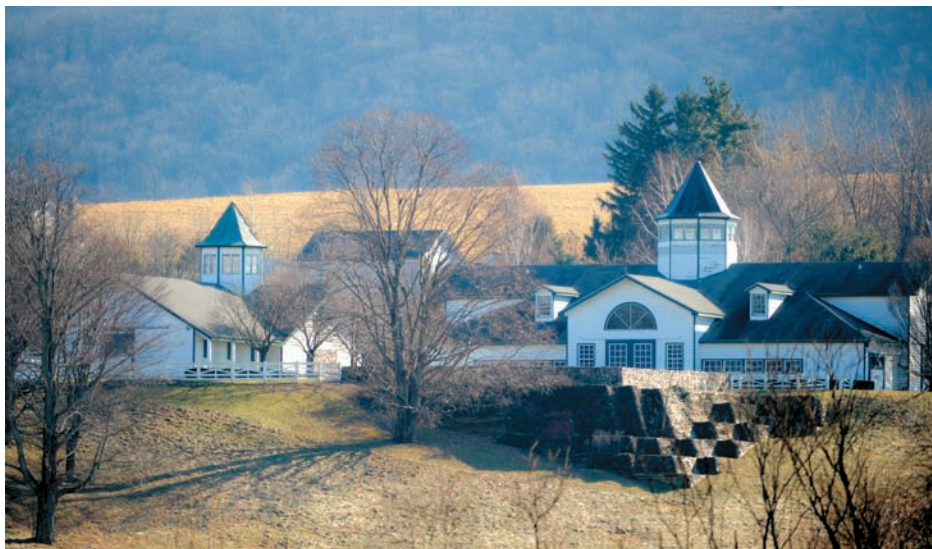

“Posse was a phenomenal first-year sire, the leading freshman sire of 2007,” Ludt said. “One of his offspring was Kodiak Kowboy, who had three grade I wins under his belt for us, and we felt he belonged in Kentucky. But putting Kodiak Kowboy next to Posse, his father, was a challenge because they weren't separated enough based off economics and stud fees. So we took a chance in bringing a high-end stallion like Posse to Empire, hedging that revenue from purses would eventually come with slots.”

The gamble paid off, as Posse became the leading New York sire by earnings in 2010 in his first year there while standing for $10,000. No other stallion besides Touch Gold stood for as much as $10,000 that year. Posse, also the leading New York sire in 2011, has had full books since arriving.

But Vinery wasn't finished with its bold moves in New York. Not long after it had taken over Empire, Ludt received an unexpected phone call from Dan Hayden, the stallion director at prestigious Sugar Maple Farm near Poughquag.

“He said, ‘Why didn't you call me?’ I told him we just did a deal with Empire, I didn't think we needed two farms,” Ludt recalled. “But we ended up going up there to look at it, and it's such a beautiful place and in a great spot. I didn't know it at the time, but the architect of that farm is the same architect of our farm in Lexington, which is ironic."

Dan Hayden, stallion director at Sugar Maple Farm

One conversation led to another and after negotiating with Sugar Maple owners Howard and Susan Kaskel, Vinery struck a lease deal with the farm in February 2011, just three months after taking over Empire, naming Hayden farm manager and making the decision to move all of its New York stallions there. Empire, about 45 miles north of Sugar Maple, would be used mainly as a boarding facility.

"The facilities here are second to none; it's just like a 500-acre spread in the middle of Kentucky," said the Irish-born Hayden, who came to Sugar Maple in 2001 in part to learn under the legendary John Nerud, a consultant to the farm at the time. "It has six beautiful barns, a stud barn, and is well-fenced and laid out. It's efficient and on very good land. It has great grass; the soil is tested every year by Roger Allman at The Farm Clinic in Lexington. He knows the land well and tests each field and paddock. We set up a separate fertilizer program for each individual field.

"The staff is great here; most of them have been here a long time, and the managerial staff has worked worldwide. We've seen how it's done in numerous places around the world. The key to any farm raising horses comes down to people, and the people here are knowledgeable.

This year, take the high road . . .

with a New York sire.

"People shouldn't have any fear coming to New York. We have a world-class facility here. Horses will be cared for like they are anywhere else."

With its new home at Sugar Maple, which raised horses such as Budweiser Irish Derby (Ire-I) winner Sir Harry Lewis and champions Sky Beauty and Itsall-greektome, Vinery needed to make one more major move. That came in November 2011 when it struck a deal with WinStar Farm to partner on a 2012 stallion deal with Bluegrass Cat, who was runner-up in North America as both freshman and second-crop sire. He was just the type of big-name stallion Vinery needed to make a splash at Sugar Maple. Ironically, talks of a major stallion deal first began not with WinStar, but with Mike Repole, the major New York owner who campaigned 2010 champion 2-year-old male Uncle Mo.

"I talked to Tom and told him I would buy into any big-name stallion for Vinery Sugar Maple," said Repole, who is from Queens and is a major supporter of New York racing. "Tom has a great relationship with (WinStar president) Elliott Walden and so do I. So the three-way relationship made sense. Once Tom and Elliott worked out the details on Bluegrass Cat, I bought into the syndicate.

"I think the day they received my check Sabercat (a son of Bluegrass Cat) won the $1 million Delta (Downs) Jackpot (gr. III). That made the investment look pretty good right away."

Bluegrass Cat will stand for $17,500 this year, the highest price for any New York stallion.

Including Bluegrass Cat and Posse, Vinery Sugar Maple will stand six stallions in 2012. The others are multiple grade II winner and first-year stallion D' Funnybone, New York-bred Friendly Island, grade I winner Frost Giant, and Giant Surprise, a well-bred son of Giant's Causeway who won his debut for Repole before an injury ended his career.

With a quality roster of stallions, huge purse increases at NYRA tracks, and the lucrative state-bred program expected to total $12 million by the end of 2012, Vinery is now in position to take advantage of the growing New York breeding market.

"You're going to see more mares staying in state to breed than ever before," Hayden said. "There is a big difference in breeders' incentive awards in regard to New York sires. It financially benefits people to stay."

"I give Tom a ton of credit," said Repole, the co-founder of VitaminWater. "If New York becomes what everyone thinks it will become in breeding, Vinery will have a huge advantage over the competition. When we look back at this 10 years from now, we'll say Vinery was one of the first farms to have the guts and courage to come before VLTs. They took the gamble first and sometimes moving first, in any business, is most important."

Though stallion revenue is Vinery's No. 1 income source, it is a full-service operation that handles plenty of boarding. Simon's Grapestock is the international breeding arm of Vinery and has already sent numerous mares to its two New York farms. With 160 stalls between them, Empire and Sugar Maple have the potential to handle 150 mares.

Vinery has also dipped into the consignment business. Derek MacKenzie was made its director of public sales and the organization was aggressive at the 2011 Fasig-Tipton Saratoga New York-bred preferred yearling sale, offering 25 horses and selling 22 (15 at the sale, seven post-sale).

It also sold horses in Kentucky and Florida as well and Ludt said consigning will be a growing part of Vinery's business in the future.

Finally, while Ludt admits that Vinery is racing significantly less now than in years past (it currently has about 25 horses in training, down from about 70) and bought fewer yearlings than normal, the farm scored its biggest victory ever at the 2011 Breeders' Cup World Championships when homebred Regally Ready won the Breeders' Cup Turf Sprint (gr. IIT) at Churchill Downs. It was Vinery's first Breeders' Cup victory ever. Regally Ready is by Vinery stallion More Than Ready, who stands in Kentucky.

"Regally Ready was special for so many reasons," Ludt said. "When Tommy (Simon) took charge, he really started supporting his stallions. To have his first big stallion, More Than Ready, a homebred, sire a winner, was great. The Simons are rarely here—they live in Germany—so for them to be here and experience it was terrific. And for me, to be fortunate enough to be chairman of Breeders' Cup, all the stars lined up. I told everyone I better step down now because it will never get any better than this. It was huge. We couldn't have scripted it any better." 🐾

The 500-acre Sugar Maple Farm had the same architect as Vinery Kentucky
